ABSTRACT

This cumulative index provides access to the almost 1,300 entries in three bibliographies: (1) "Media and the Young Adult: A Selected Bibliography, 1950-1972"; (2) "Media and the Young Adult: A Selected Bibliography, 1973-1977"; and (3) "Research on Adolescence for Youth Services: An Annotated Bibliography on Adolescent Development, Educational Needs and Media, 1979-1980." Published as a result of the efforts of the American Library Association (ALA) to systematically gather and abstract selective research studies that would be of value to librarians working with young adults in the United States and other English-speaking countries, the bibliographies list research studies that are interdisciplinary in approach and include such areas as education, sociology, psychology, psychiatry, mass communication, and marketing as well as library and information science. The index lists subject headings and subheadings as well as providing cross-references to related concepts and preferred terms. Bibliography volumes are designated "A," "B," and "C" for the volumes containing references from 1950-1972, 1973-1977, and 1978-1980, respectively, and entry item numbers are also provided. (KM)

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Many individuals have played significant roles in the development of this index. First, thanks go to Linda Webster and Linda Fetters who allowed this project to be used as an indexing assignment in the Indexing and Abstracting course which they taught in the Graduate School of Library and Information Science, University of Texas at Austin, during the spring semester, 1986. Their guidance and assistance was invaluable to its successful completion.

Graduate students Debora Kay Buffington Tien-Chi Tina Hou, Jane L. Ingold, and Ann Shoemake are to be commended on their willingness and eagerness to undertake the actual indexing of this material as a "real-world" learning experience. Their attention to detail and precision will help greatly in making this information available to both present and future users.

Finally, acknowledgement must be made to the staff of the Information Retrieval Laboratory, Graduate School of Library and Information Science, University of Texas at Austin. Under the able direction of Ling-Hwey Jeng, this staff helped develop the computer-generated format of the present publication.

INTRODUCTION

In 1969 the Research Committee of the American Library Association undertook a prolonged project designed to systematically gather and abstract selective research studies which would be of value to librarians working with young adults in library programs in both the United States and other English-speaking countries. The committee recognized that young adults services in libraries stood at a critical stage and that better use of research data was necessary if young adults services in libraries were to make substantial progress in the years ahead.

Although in 1969 research did exist which was addressed to specific problems of youth and their relationships to library and information services, the committee felt that this research was sparse and rather embryonic and that better access to a wide variety of research was necessary for those who actually planned, operated, and managed ongoing library and information services for youth. The committee envisioned that fields, such as education, sociology, psychology, psychiatry, mass communication, and marketing could help bring new insights and understanding to the development of youth services in libraries.

Using a broad definition of "research," the committee and later its subordinate, the Media and Young Adult Subcommittee, during the years 1969 to 1979 searched a wide variety of documents and index sources dating from 1950 in an attempt to locate relevant research studies germane to its goal. Three separate publications resulted from these bibliographic searches: Media and the Young Adult: A Selected Bibliography, 1950-1972, edited by M. Bernard Lukenbill (ALA, 1977); Media and the Young Adult: A Selected Bibliography, 1973-1977, edited by M. Bernard Lukenbill and Elaine P. Adams (ALA, 1981); and Research on Adolescence for Youth Services: An Annotated Bibliography on Adolescent Development, Educational Needs and Media, 1979-1980, edited by Gerald G. Hodges and Frances Bryant Bradburn (ALA, 1984).

The present publication presents a cumulative index to the almost 1300 entries in these three bibliographies. Subject headings are in all capital letters; subheadings are in lowercase letters underneath the headings. Cross references provide easy access to related concepts and preferred terms. The locator is a combination of volume letter (A, B, or C) and the item number. A is used for the volume containing references from 1950-1972. B is used for the volume containing references from 1973-1977. C is used for the volume containing references from 1978-1980.
